

Detachable, smart jewels

These jewels can give you a personal choice and exclusivity

PREETI JAIN

Today, with soaring prices you can't either afford to buy expensive jewellery or indeed lose what you already have! So, what do you do? The answer to this comes in the shape and form of detachable jewellery. This type of adornment ensures that you no longer have to keep your signature jewellery pieces in the safe.

Yes, this is the new accessory trend that is creating waves amongst the fashion frat. Detachable jewellery allows you to be chic, elegant and classy on every occasion. But what exactly is detachable jewellery? The answer is simple: when worn as a complete piece, the jewellery is heavy, rich and opulent but the piece can be rearranged to give you a lighter look that suits both a formal and casual occasion. For instance, you can wear a heavy necklace to a wedding but you can take it apart and wear the pendant as a brooch and the band around your neck as a choker. In short,

Necklaces can be designed in a way that a part of the main piece can be detached and worn as a bracelet detachable jewellery can be reassembled and worn in more than one way.

A straight beneficiary of the trend is the new-age bride who no longer faces the problem of being stuck with an ornate necklace that she cannot wear to a casual daytime function. Now she has a range in bridal necklaces that can be worn either as complete pieces or detached for regular functions. This kind of jewellery gives the wearer a personal choice and exclusivity. All you need to do is buy a few chains in a variety of sizes so that you can detach the pendant from the 'mother' necklace and wear it in a length of your choice!

Necklaces can be designed in such a way that a part of the main piece can be detached and worn like a bracelet, while the other part still serves as a lighter neck ornamentation. Earrings could even become cufflinks with a little bit of creativity!

Personally, my favourite designs are earrings with emeralds and rubies together as they are most challenging to blend. To make two strong colours into one single piece is a hugely creative task; be it in a pendant set or a necklace. These can again be worn with most coloured attire.

Today the accent is on multi-occasional jewellery. So, if you have some old jewellery that you don't wear because it is far too old fashioned or opulent get it converted into detachable designs.

The writer is jewellery designer